

5 Things To Avoid When Selecting A Trading Educator

1. Instructors

When it comes to educators you don't want to learn from an instructor, you want to learn from a trader. I often see false promises from these educators and they know what to say to get novice traders interested. They understand that people who are unfamiliar with trading will be in awe if you talk about how much money you can make and how great their life is. A genuine trading educator is not going to make false promises or brag about their winning trades and life style. A genuine trading educator will inform newer traders that trading is extremely difficult and it is not easy.

2. Mechanical Systems

You often hear educators talking about how profitable their system is. "85% winning trades." "All you have to do is pay $3,000 and my automated turbo system is yours." Seriously? Do you think if there were such a system that anyone would sell it? Of course not. A mechanical system would stop working even if it were that profitable because all the users would be competing for fills and the edge would disappear. You want to find an educator that teaches market structure and price action.

3. Proprietary Indicators

This is an area that really fools a lot of new traders. Most traders are on the quest for the Holy Grail and are constantly searching for a new indicator that will lead to their success. Educators know this and they try to make money off of novice traders by selling them a so called indicator that give users an edge. There is no such thing that exists.

4. No Work = Large Profits

If an educator is advertising I make $1,000 a day with 30 minutes of work. Don't walk, run! It's more beneficial to these educators if they tell novice traders trading is easy and look how much money I made with no work. Who wouldn't love to make large sums of money with next to no work? You can see why so many new traders fall victim to these predators.

5. Trade Rooms

I'm sure many of you have been in at least one. There probably are good trade rooms out there with skilled traders moderating them, I just haven't found any. The rooms I have been in were terrible and I would advise traders to stay away from them. I've seen trade rooms that only call trades after the fact. For example the market will be trading at 95.50 and they say "I hope you guys are long with me, I'm long from 95.00." They don't give you a chance to enter and often times they act like you missed out and it was a clearly defined setup. What's really going on is an unskilled educator trying to pull the wool over your eyes.

Optic Trading is none of these things. You will not learn from an instructor you will learn from a full-time professional trader. No mechanical systems here. You will learn a discretionary method that covers how to read market structure and price action. No indicator will give you a better advantage than you can give yourself. Indicators reflect price, so if you learn how to read market structure and price action, you will be miles ahead of these so called proprietary indicators. Trading is extremely difficult and it is not easily mastered. If anyone's going to make you successful it's you. I hope you see the value in this short recourse. Thank you for taking an interest in Optic Trading and I hope to hear from you.
